Before the Pappajohn Sculpture Park became a reality in 2009, "Gateway Park," completed in 2006, sat in the same location from 10th to 15th Streets between Grand Avenue and Locust Street. Prior to 2006, the area was a collection of older buildings, auto repair shops, and vacant store fronts. Today, the Pappajohn Sculpture Park, built within a major crossroads of the urban grid, is one of the most significant such parks in the United States, attracting visitors from around the city, the nation, and the world.

THE JOHN AND MARY PAPAJOHN SCULPTURE PARK CELEBRATES 10 YEARS IN THE CITY.

t is hard to believe it's been ten years since the Art Center and the City of Des Moines opened the John and Mary Pappajohn Sculpture Park in the Western Gateway. Since its opening, we have seen it contribute to the cultural, educational, social, and economic transformation of the city.

I will never forget my phone call from John Pappajohn in March 2007 when he told me that he and Mary would like to give the Art Center their collection of sculptures for placement in the newly opened Western Gateway Park.

The Pappajohns had been invaluable contributors in many ways to the cultural fabric of Des Moines for years. Both had served on the boards of many art institutions, including the Des Moines Art Center. They could have given the sculptures to any of the many museums around the country they supported. However, fortunately for the Art Center and for the city, John and Mary's vision was to create a site where the entire community could enjoy and interact with the best of contemporary art, free of charge, in their hometown. John called Christine Hensley, who was then a member of the Des Moines City Council. Both of us thought their plan was a splendid idea.

The park - which is an extension of the Art Center - opened in September 2009 with 25 sculptures by 19 internationally acclaimed artists, many representing their best efforts. The list included Louise Bourgeois, Deborah Butterfield, Willem de Kooning, Mark di Suvero, Gary Hume, Martin Puryear, Richard Serra and Tony Smith. This gift of artworks, valued at more than $40,000,000, became the single largest gift to the Art Center in its history. Today, thanks to the support of John and Mary, we have been able to add five additional pieces by artists Ai Weiwei, Olafur Eliasson, Keith Haring, Yayoi Kusama, and Yoshitoma Nara, bringing the total to 30 sculptures by 24 artists.

The original contribution from John and Mary included many sculptures relocated from their home, but that quickly changed. Jaume Plensa's Nomade soon joined the list of works for the park; then others followed, including three works commissioned specifically for the park, Deborah Butterfield's Ancient Forest, Gary Hume's Back of Snowman (Black), and Olafur Eliasson's Panoramic awareness pavilion.

While these gifts are certainly monumental in and of themselves, what followed the originating phone call from John was equally extraordinary. An array of planners and participants began to evaluate what it would mean to transform the existing park. It is important to remember that the City of Des Moines had just opened the Western Gateway Park in 2006 after spending almost $26,000,000 to buy and tear down many existing structures, and then build an open space for the residents and visitors of the metro. It was to be Des Moines' version of Central Park, part of a plan begun in 1991 to transform downtown Des Moines. (The Western Gateway still encompasses 10th to 13th Streets; the space between 13th and 15th became the sculpture park.)

An array of private citizens, including Jim Cownie, Christine Hensley, and Steve Zumbach then began the process of raising funds for the construction of the park. These extraordinary individuals raised $6,500,000 from 31 individuals, corporations, and foundations during the great recession of 2008 and 2009. It turns out the community thought the idea was splendid as well. New York architects Diana Agrest and Mario Gandelsonas, who had a 20-year history with Des Moines, were hired to design the new outdoor museum and the plans were unveiled at the Bravo Gala in 2008.

An Art Center gala celebrating the opening of the park on September 26, 2009 drew more than 500 attendees. Gala attendees began the evening with cocktails near Plensa's Nomade; then wound their way through the park, led by bagpipes, to dinner in a beautifully lit tent. It was a magical evening that honored the Pappajohns and celebrated the opening of the park.

The following day, the Art Center hosted a public opening celebration. Crowds attended the official ribbon cutting, and enjoyed a day filled with music, dancing, and discovery of the city's new world-class outdoor museum.

The Pappajohn Sculpture Park was immediately seen as a change-maker for the city; even The New York Times took notice. The park is now one of the most recognized sculpture parks in the country.

It has become a gathering space for all segments of the community, a beacon for tourists and visitors to the metro, and an economic engine.

For example, the assessed tax value of the surrounding properties was $35,000,000 in 2009; it now stands at more than $400,000,000. All of the existing buildings on the south side of the park have been renovated, and the Krause Gateway Center, designed by the internationally celebrated architect Renzo Piano, recently opened on the north side of the park to great acclaim.

Speaking of which, the Art Center's annual September gala will take place in the Piano building. The buzz on the street was so intense it has already sold out. In addition, the Art Center will host a free Community Celebration on Saturday, September 7, 4 – 7 pm.*

Thank you to John and Mary Pappajohn for their generosity and vision; thank you to the City of Des Moines for taking risks and for being an extraordinary partner in this grand endeavor; and thank you to our supporters and participants for helping us along the way. JEFF FLEMING

"The John and Mary Pappajohn Sculpture Park has had a huge impact not only economically but also on the quality of life within our community. It has drawn major employers to the area and been the catalyst behind significant increases in taxable property. What a truly amazing gift from the Pappajohn's that will be there for all of us and future generations to come. A BIG thank you!" CHRISTINE HENSLEY

- "At the time John and Mary Pappajohn proposed the Sculpture Park, we could not have imagined the impact it would have on our community. Because world-class art is located in the center of the downtown, with no walls and it is completely accessible, thousands of visitors enjoy the park every year. It is the new image for our city. It was a gift for the ages." STEVE ZUMBACH
- "The John and Mary Pappajohn Sculpture Park is a crown jewel of downtown Des Moines! Thousands of visitors annually enjoy this magnificent collection – perhaps serving as the first introduction to the fabulous artwork we have in the metro. Ten years ago, the Sculpture Park became a focal point in our region's identity and served as inspiration to launching many other art initiatives for visitors to enjoy." GREG EDWARDS / PRESIDENT & CEO CATCH DES MOINES

"Seldom does a major project come along that is viewed as 'win-win' by virtually everyone. The Pappajohn Sculpture Park is such a project. The Pappajohns, Art Center, City, County, philanthropic and business communities all worked together to create the downtown gem. Thanks to Mario Gandelsonas for his big thinking during the Des Moines Vision Plan days." JIM COWNIE

- "The John and Mary Pappajohn Sculpture Park has played a key role in fulfilling the vision to transform the Western Gateway. The park's creation is another example of the strong leadership and spirit of philanthropy that has resulted in our region's momentum and national recognition as a best place to live and work." JAY BYERS / CEO / THE GREATER DES MOINES PARTNERSHIP
- "The park made this area a destination to be, and this is why you have seen restaurants like us and companies like Flynn Wright and Kum & Go making a home here in the Western Gateway. We wanted to be near the park when we opened, and have incorporated local art as part of our brand. Every year the area and the park draw more and more locals and visitors. It is a must see when in Des Moines." MIKE UTLEY / OWNER & OPERATOR / AMERICANA

"My father opened Ford & Garland 60 years ago on the land where the sculpture park now stands. At that time the area was called AUTO ROW and we provided services to Des Moines' major car dealerships, all of which were in the area. We stayed in the area even after the dealerships moved, and are now on Locust directly across from the park. The park really offers a nice place for all of us who work in the neighborhood and for our customers to enjoy." DEBBIE JENSEN / FORD & GARLAND

Artist Olafur Eliasson's visit in 2013 for the unveiling of his Panoramic awareness pavilion was memorable (detail above). He spoke eloquently as he unveiled the artwork that was created especially for the park, the only site-specific public work by the artist in the United States. The piece required distinctive glass manufactured in Germany and special engineering to create a one-of-a-kind experience for the viewer. It has become a beacon of light, like a lighthouse, to guide visitors in the park.

Queer Abstraction

Queer Abstraction is a landmark exhibition. Not only is it the first show in the Des Moines Art Center's 70-year history to focus exclusively on LGBTQ themes, but it is also the first major museum exhibition devoted to the subject. Featuring approximately 50 works of art, Queer Abstraction unites both national and international contemporary artists who utilize the amorphous possibilities of abstraction to convey what it means to exist on the margins.

Between Vertical and Horizon: Japanese Works on Paper brings together more than 30 works of art that range in date from the mid-19th century to the 1980s. Despite the years that separate them, many of the artworks share similar formal styles—such as the division of the picture plane into quadrants, or tight cropping—which illuminates how influential former printmakers have been on contemporary Japanese artists. Included in the exhibition are woodblock prints by Ando Hiroshige and Utagawa Kunisada, drawings by artist and architect Shusaku Arakawa, and lithographs by Okiie Hashimoto and Shoichi Ida.

JOYCE J. SCOTT

On Sunday, August 25, 1:30 pm, the Art Center welcomes artist Joyce J. Scott for a candid talk about her life and work. Titled "Joyce J. Scott: My Best Voice is an Artist," the lecture will take place in Levitt Auditorium. The event is free; reservations required.

> "They say, talk about what you know ... that's why I use myself and my career as a visual and performance artist as my platform. Being born in the 1940s and now living in the first quarter of the 21st century as an African American woman, I have a lot to say about what I've experienced. It all converges in my artwork. My joys and challenges, fears and evolution blend. Many feel artists live only for their work. However I, like many, use my practice to express my citizenship and commitment to change by speaking through it, of our social and political existence. My work's beauty is a lure. I hone my skills because I believe in my craftsmanship and the message it can deliver through its excellence." JOYCE J. SCOTT

Joyce J. Scott's sculpture Mistaken Identity entered the Art Center's permanent collection in 2018. It will be on view at the Des Moines Community College Urban Campus from August 19–23.

2019 FINGERMAN LECTURE SERIES THE CHANGING ROLE OF MUSEUMS

Envisioning a Bold and Relevant Future for Museums

On the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the Fingerman Lecture, and the public announcement of our positioning statement, the Des Moines Art Center has been presenting a series of lectures by leading museum directors about the role of museums in addressing the complexity of today's cultural, political, and social concerns. James Rondeau and Kaywin Feldman visited in the spring; Franklin Sirmans and Kevin Gover will visit in the fall, all of them advancing ideas that challenge long held beliefs about museums and help us envision a bold and relevant future for our cultural institutions.

This series is made possible through generous gifts by Louis and Lois Fingerman. The artists and scholars who have spoken at the Art Center have enriched the understanding of the works of art collected here, as well as provided the opportunity for the community to become familiar with ideas and topics embodied in the art of our time. We hope this series sparks conversations, promotes curiosity, and furthers critical and empathetic thinking.

THE POWER OF ART TO HEAL

Ernie Mejia had recently moved to Des Moines from San Antonio when he discovered the Art Center. A military veteran, Ernie was referred by the Central Iowa VA to the Art Center's Healing Hands workshop, a clay class for veterans focusing on the fundamentals of wheel throwing. He hadn't discovered what art could offer him, but in his Healing Hands class he found what he called a feeling of release, and something of great value.

Ernie took advantage of the Art Center's robust scholarship program; without it, he says, taking classes at the Art Center

Ernie is currently exploring an evening mosaics class.

"wouldn't be affordable," jumping from his initial clay class to other media, eventually finding a passion for oil painting. It was in this medium that he grappled with his experiences as a veteran.

"War as I know it," Ernie said, "is a horrible thing to witness. The images will never leave you." But Ernie learned to engage with those images. "Many artists prefer to put a face to it on canvas."

As he continued his studio education, the Art Center's classes also gave Ernie courage outside of the classroom relating to the general public. His art allowed him to share his memories and feelings.

"As a soldier artist, you can make them think that they walk in your shoes, or feel the pain and suffering of a soldier in combat far from home." He appreciated that his classes instilled in him a sense of calm, an ability not to live in the past, and the motivation and drive to express his experiences rather than leave them "in a very dark corner of history." He said that in time he came to see that same expressive drive in his fellow veterans who visited the Art Center's studios.

Ernie says his adjustment to Des Moines has been eased by the Art Center, and the courses have allowed him to finally pursue a passion. "I've been in Des Moines for a few months and the only thing that has impacted me are the courses I've been able to attend. I'm doing something I've always wanted to do: art."

MEMBERSHIP #ARTCENTERED MY MUSEUM MONDAY

What would you do with time completely to yourself at the Art Center? My Museum Monday is an experience available to active members at all giving levels. The next application period is open through July 19.

Kristie Bell was a recent My Museum Monday participant, and created a cross-stitch of Ai Weiwei's Self-Portrait in LEGO. Membership and Mission Impact Intern Sunee Kate Quirante interviewed Kristie about her experience.

What inspired you to choose this piece?

"As I visited looking for inspiration, this Ai Weiwei struck me as a perfect piece to cross stitch because it already uses pixilation to convey the image, which is essentially what cross-stitch does. This piece (and artist) is an excellent way to challenge the notion that cross-stitch is uncool or only for little old ladies. It can be modern and fresh! I'm on a one-woman mission to make cross-stitch cool!"

What was your favorite part about the experience?

"I loved the quiet, warm, bright space and the knowledge that I didn't have anything to do but stitch for three hours. I initially thought I'd listen to podcasts or music during my time but eventually decided to make it a more contemplative experience, so I let my mind wander. It was therapeutic."

Why do you support the Art Center as a member?

"Being a member helps me feel connected to the belief that art — in all forms — has the power to inspire." FROM DIRECTOR OF DEVELOPMENT TIFFANY K. NAGEL SPINNER

MEMBER TRAVEL OPPORTUNITY

Regional Trip for Archeology Enthusiasts

SATURDAY / AUGUST 3 / $35

In a recent conversation with Jeff Fleming, he shared his interest in the Steamboat Bertrand Museum, located in the DeSoto National Wildlife Refuge, near Missouri Valley, lowa. The museum is the home to a premier archeological collection of more than 250,000 artifacts excavated from the buried wreck of the Steamboat Bertrand.

Modern treasurer hunters located the wreck in the DeSoto National Wildlife Refuge in 1968. By 1969, the vessel's cargo was completely excavated from its 30-foot-deep, mud tomb. Unfortunately for the salvors, the treasure they sought had eluded them: insurance company divers had apparently removed most of the mercury and other valuables soon after the ship sank. However, what had been left was a diversity of tools, clothing, and food items. The Bertrand's cargo was remarkably well preserved and the refuge's collection is a unique time capsule for researchers and visitors interested in America's 19th-century material culture.

Members will depart the Art Center on Saturday, August 3 at 7:30 am via motorcoach. We will spend two hours at the DeSoto Wildlife Refuge and Steamboat Betrand Museum before heading to lunch in Council Bluffs. We'll explore public art before heading back to the Art Center at 3 pm for a 5 pm return. Space on this one-of-a-kind experience is limited to 30. Please contact me at tspinner@desmoinesartcenter.org or 515.271.0338 to RSVP.

MEMORIAL AND HONORARY GIFTS

DONOR SPOTLIGHT

THE MEIER BERNSTEIN FOUNDATION

When I asked Carol Leshner, executive director of the Meier Bernstein Foundation, why the foundation chose to support the Des Moines Art Center, she immediately responded by saying "Art reaches the heart and souls of people. People see the beauty of the world through art." She went on to state that for those that can't afford to do much by way of entertainment, the fact that the Art Center is a free community resource is one of their primary considerations. Meier Bernstein is honored to provide financial support to Art Access programming and since their first gift of $10,000 in 2001, the foundation has provided in excess of $435,000 and reached more than 34,000 students.

On a recent phone call with Ms. Leshner, she shared that Meier Bernstein was born in the early 1900s and had a challenging childhood, spending most of his life in an orphanage until the age of 15.

When he went to The Met at the age of 20, he fell in love with art. He became an artist himself, focusing on painting and drawing.

He married a concert pianist and started an art book business where he became quite successful. Later in life, he was active in the stock market and started his foundation in the 1970s. Prior to his death in the early 1990s, he directed Ms. Leshner to find meaningful ways to help people connect with art. The Meier Bernstein Foundation exists today to create, amend, or join and fund programs that serve those who have lived with poverty, neglect, homelessness, abuse, fear, and hopelessness. The foundation hopes to enable awakening new or discarded dreams, revealing self-worth, nourishing hidden talents, and providing pathways to accomplishment and peace. The Art Center's Art Access programs reach students dealing with all of these issues with the same goals in mind.

If you would like to learn more about supporting Art Access programming or free admission, please contact me at tspinner@desmoinesartcenter.org or 515.271.0338. These gifts were received between March 1 and May 31, 2019.

Born in Winterset, Iowa, George Stout (left) served in both WWI and WWII. During WWII, Stout led the Monuments Men (above) through Europe on the greatest treasure hunt in history — protecting and recovering priceless art from the Nazis. This film documents his legacy and his innovative methods of art conservation, which are still used today in major museums around the world.
